CAMPAIGNER-CENTERED MINISTRY?

What does it mean? What value does it have? What is challenging about it? Why would we do it? Why would we not do it? What does it look like?

LOOKING AT MINISTRY WITH A DIFFERENT LENS

< One of my biggest goals this year has been to grow closer to God. I was doing so good with going to church, doing my Bible studies, praying, and just trying to grow spiritually and become a better person. But when school started, little by little, I started putting those things aside. Between school, studying, being a mom, and being a girlfriend, life has gotten so busy that I slowly started forgetting to make time for Jesus. These past few days, I've been realizing it, and honestly, I've been feeling guilty.
I've wanted to sit down and do my Bible studies, but by the time I finish everything I need to do, I'm already exhausted and it's time to go to sleep. But tonight's study of Mark 1:35 reminded me of something so important. Jesus Himself made time to be alone with God, even with everything He had to do. And what really got me was that THIS MORNING, around 6 AM, I was showering and praying, just talking to God, without even realizing how much it connected to what I would read tonight. It felt like God was gently reminding me that no matter how busy life gets, I can't forget to make time for Him.
Not because He doesn't understand my responsibilities, but because He wants that relationship with me, even in the middle of them. I'm learning that growing closer to God doesn't mean life will suddenly become less busy. It means learning to make room for Him even when life is busy. I don't want to let school, motherhood, relationships, or everyday responsibilities make me lose sight of the One who gives me strength through it all. Tonight was a reminder that I don't have to be perfect, and I don't have to wait for the perfect time to come back to Him. I just have to be intentional and keep showing up.

I DO; YOU WATCH.

I DO; YOU HELP.

YOU DO; I HELP.

YOU DO; I WATCH.
